SUPPLEMENT TO REPORT NO.

25X1A Comment: All statements in this report, not otherwise dated, refer to conditions as observed by source in 1945. This information supplements and in some cases supersedes the information given in [REDACTED] 25X1X

- 25X1A
1. Paichengtzu airfield, which was constructed in 1942, is about six kilometers northwest of the Paichengtzu station (122-52, 45-37) on the north side of the Paichengtzu-Wangyehmiao (122-01, 46-05) railroad.
 2. The airfield is situated on a level plain and is approximately 1,500 meters square. The soil is mixed with pebbles and sustains a grass which grows to a height of four inches. Sixteen to twenty inches below the surface of the field there is a stone bed formed by a river that formerly flowed through the area. The field can withstand the heaviest rainfall common to the region without becoming muddy.
 3. There is a paved runway on the airfield that is at least 1,000 meters long. The field was formerly used by a Japanese light bombing regiment. There are seven to nine hangars, a repair factory, a radio station, and living quarters on the south side of the airfield. Electricity is supplied by the Paichengtzu power plant.
